

Drini Imami is a lecturer at the Faculty of Economics and Agribusiness at the Agricultural University of Tirana. He holds a PhD in Economics and Agriculture and Food Policy from the University of Bologna, Italy and since 2013 is an Associate Professor (title awarded by the Agricultural University of Tirana).

He has conducted research in several well-known European research institutions such as IAMO, BOKU, etc., and participated and referred in many international scientific conferences, and also has contributed to about 60 articles in scientific journals (mostly indexed) including the Cambridge Journal of Regions, Economy and Society, Post-Communist Economies, Economic Systems, Economics of Transition, Journal of Evolutionary Economics, Communist and Post-Communist Studies, IFAMR etc.

He has received several awards, grants and scholarships including the prestigious "Brains In" scholarship from the Institute of Advanced Studies, the Center of excellence of the University of Bologna. Mr. Imami has been engaged as a consultant by various international projects and organizations in Albania and other countries and has contributed to many technical reports as well as several development strategies.